See "Photoshop Projects: The best of our Photoshop project tutorials" on the DVD that comes with this book for more on how to use Photoshop. Creating an Underwater Photo As a professional underwater photographer, it's important to try out a few digital editing tricks. If you don't attempt to modify your images, you are left with only the one you captured. One way to add that finishing touch to your underwater images is to spend a bit of extra time trying out filters and effects in an image editing program. Figure 9-2 shows an underwater scene with rich textures and color from a filter applied. Figure 9-2: You can use filters to experiment with your images. Creating an underwater underwater image in Photoshop Of course, you don't need an underwater environment to create an underwater scene in Photoshop. All you need is an underwater scene and a basic understanding of color and contrast to create a custom Photoshop underwater photo. Basically, start by opening a photograph, such as the one shown in Figure 9-3, in Photoshop. (You can also use a photograph you already have as the source image. For more on working with photographs in Photoshop, see Chapter 2.) Figure 9-3: Create your own underwater scene in Photoshop. 1. Open the image in Photoshop. 2. In the Layers panel, click the Create New Layer button in the lower-right corner of the Layers panel. This opens the New Layer dialog box. 3. Enter an appropriate name for your new layer in the New Layer dialog box. For an underwater scene, you may want to use the word Underwater. 4. Select the Color Selection Tool. 5. Click once on the image. 6. Click again on the image, but this time, move the mouse over a color you want to add to the picture. The image gets a slightly different color cast from the original as you highlight color. 7. Click and drag the selected area over the image. Drag a color to highlight a specific area of the image. 8. Continue dragging and add more colors until you finish highlighting a variety of colors to create an underwater scene.

As the Roman Empire spreads across Europe and reaches the North, the Germanic tribes of northern Europe take part in massive raids deep into the Empire's territory. As the war enters a period of stalemate, increasing tension in the Empire leads to a series of savage acts of retribution. The Emperor Justinian sends his general Belisarius to help keep order, but as the Black Death spreads across the Mediterranean, the barbarians are pressing deep into the Empire's heartlands. During this moment of darkness, Justinian must confront both his own shortcomings as a ruler and the darker truth of his nation - where right and wrong seem to be at absolute odds. As the empire's people and leaders are fighting each other, the barbarian hordes are growing ever more powerful, and they are having increasing success at raiding deep into the Empire's heartland. It is only a matter of time before the barbarian hordes tear down the walls of Rome.Dark-field imaging of interfacial charge distributions. Direct imaging of the distribution of interfacial charges in thin metal films is difficult because of the low reflectivity of these materials. Here, we employ scanning dark-field microscopy to image charge at the surface of a thin Au film on $SiO(2)$ as a function of applied potential. The dark-field signal is proportional to the square of the electrostatic potential of the sample and hence provides a means to probe electrostatic potential and its spatial variations near the sample. We demonstrate that measurement of electrostatic potential variations near the interface provides a new method for determining the capacitance of the interface.Q: Text-align and block-break-inside in div not working There seems to be a very strange problem happening with this simple test page: If you resize the window so that the width is smaller than approximately 800px and then select the text on the 'left' div it throws off the formatting and it looks terrible. I cannot work out why - I have added the text-align:center and block-break-inside:avoid; CSS properties to no effect. It seems very strange and I'm not sure how to deal with this. A: This is because when the window is narrow enough, there's not enough vertical space to center the text so the middle of the word on the right breaks over to the left of it, thus misaligning both divs. tag:
